A US firm is offering women a new creation - shoes which can be transformed from sexy stilettos to comfy flats in seconds.

The shoes are produced with adjustable heels which can be converted from a comfortable one-and-a-half inches to a stylish three-and-a-quarter inches with a push.

The fashionable footwear, which can be bought in Britain over the internet, is designed with "the professional working woman in mind", according to the stockist's website Camileon Heels.

The Italian-made shoes, which cost around £150, were created by brother-and-sister team Dr David and Lauren Handel, who used an industrial design team.

The company says the shoes can be adjusted without the need for the wearer to remove them.

To change the "high heel" position, the wearer has to push the lower part of the heel forward until it is under the arch of the shoe and is no longer visible.

The steps are reversed to change the shoe back to its original position.
